THE OLD YEAR. We would be wantng in proper respect for the memory of ousies, its aperities, its sins and misfortunes we have nothing to do-but to and was admired by all who saw it, forget them. It might have been better

—there have been worse,

After all, the old year, with its disasters and misfortunes, is not so much a bugbear to be mourned over its sad tones, as it is a ripe old fellow, who has "bolstered up our nation's years with an added unit," and pashed us a twelve an added unit," and pushed us a twelve month, with helping hand, on the way to fortune, fame and happiness. If there have been wreiched mistakes, there have been glorious achievements. If tears have fallen over new-made graves and hearts grown heavy with disappointed hopes, so have smiles lighted up vast many faces, and hearts thrilled to the music of joy and prosperity. If bells have tolled wearily and sadly for our dead, they have a ring out merrily our dead, they have rung out merily and cheerly at our weddings. If there are many regrets hanging around the old year as it dies, there are clustering already around the coming year many more bright hopes and anticipations. So we let the old year go, and with its memorles hovering over us, resolve to bridge over the dark and miserable with bright and good intentions, and open the new year with kind wishes for all—friend or foe.
